FOOK SUMMER HOUSE IN RIDGEWOOD, NEW JERSEY.

Lived There Luxuriously, with His Wife and Son, and All the While Neighboring Houses Were Robbed Right and Left.

After leading what the police describe as a "Jim the Penman" existence for nearly two years, with a summer cot-tage at Ridgewood, N. J., whence he is alleged to have directed the operations of a burglarious gang that has robbed wealthy homes in about every town in Central Jersey, George T. Kennard, alias George Howard and many other names, said to have a record of three against him in Sing Sing, was ar rested here to-day by Ridgewood's Chie of Police Peter Pulis and two local head-

They gave chase and came up with him at the foot of Sixty-sixth street. The two plain-clothes men, Foy and Hol-Pulis grabbed him. In an instant, the solice say, Kennard had a blackjack out of his pocket and made a swing at the Ridgewood man, which if it had caught three officers closed in on their quarry before he could use the weapon again

Besides the blackjack, the police de-clare they found in Kennard's possession a complete kit of burglars' tools. They took him to Headquarters and he

The Appearance at Ridgewood.

Anyway, a prosperous-looking man, who was supposed to have a business in New York, took up a residence in the most exclusive portion of Ridgewood at that time. He had a wife and a boy, Clifford, fourteen years old. The name the father save was George T. Kennard, The family was apparently so refired that it was not long before it was in full swing of the social set of the place. Kennard smoked good cigars and so did his neighbors, and the ordinary courte-sles were soon being exchanged, while Mrs. Keunard became quite as general a favorite with the women of Ridgewood as was her spouse with their husbands. Shortly after the Kennards moved into their "country home," as they called the handsome cottage which they occupied, burglars descended upon the quite little town, and it was not long before every home there with anything in it worth taking was robbed. There was talk of a citizens' committee to do the work that the authorities were paid to do, and no one was louder in "roasting" the police than Kennard. The Appearance at Ridgewood.

Stolen Property Recovered.

Burglars' Tools, Too.

When the stolen property was found in the house at Ridgewood, the rolice say, there was also brought to light a quantity of burglars' tools, nitro-glycerine, fuses and the tips of glove fingers filled with dynamite, which is the manner in which charges are prepared by crooks for safe-clowing.

During his solourn in Jersey Kennard, it is charged, visited Jersey City one night and "blew" a safe belonging to a man named Herman Rosenberg. The lob netted $150. Warrants have been in the hands of the authorities for their arrest ever since.

Kennard is only thirty-six years of are, yet the police say his criminal record goes as far back as July, 1835, when he was sentenced to the House of Cortesion at New Bedford, Mass., and subsequently, in 188, to Sing Sing for three was sentenced to the House of Cortesion at New Bedford, Mass., and subsequently, in 188, to Sing Sing for three was sentenced to the House of Cortesion at New Bedford, Mass., and subsequently, in 188, to Sing Sing for three was for ourglary and in 1895 for two sears and six months. One night a horse and wagon disappeared from a stable at Ridgewood, and its owner, disgusted with the police, decided to turn detective on his own account. He traced the wheel marks of his rig and the hoof prints of his horse, which were peculiar—the horse was pigeon-toed—down the west road to the Kennard place.

He had never thought much of the man, and in high glee he went back to Chief Peter Pulls and told him what he had found. A search warrant was procured and a descent made upon the Kennard home.

Mrs. Kennard was the only one in, and she said that her husband had left for New York the day before, with their son, and did not think he would return.

FIRST SESSION OF BEAVERS HEARING

Question of the Validity of the Indictment Is Raised Early, and an Adjournment Follows.

The preliminary examination of said that he "guessed" he would go back

Ao Jersey without the formality of exTrading was fairly active.

Trading was fairly active. The police assert that Kennard was released from Sing Sing on June 22. 1898, after having served a sentence of two years and six months for burglary committed in this city. The local police in comparing notes with the Ridgawood Chief think that he must have gone right across the river and begun his operations in that State.

in the examination.

Before the examination commenced Messrs. Morgan & Seabury said they did not expect to have Postmaster-General Payne present in person, and that the subpoena served upon him was merely for the production of certain official papers, and that they did not expect he would attend personally.

Post-Office inspector Little was called to the stand for the purpose of identifying the defendant, as required by law.

Identification of Beavers.

Mr. Wise asked the inspector if the George W. Beavers present was the same George W. Beavers named in the indictment. Before the witness could answer Mr. Steuer objected, claiming the witness had no knowledge that the George W. Beavers present in court was the identical George W. Beavers named in the indictment except by hearsay, and that he could have no positive and absolute knowledge on the subject.

The lawyers whangled over the point for some time, but it was at last settled by the witness being permitted to answer the question, and he swore that the defendant was the same person named in the indictment.

Major Little then left the stand and Mr. Steuer moved to dismiss the proceedings on the ground that the facts as alleged in the complaint were insufficient and that no proof had been presented for the Commissioner's consideration in support of the indictment and complaint as required by law.

Mr. Wise, in replying to the argument of the defense, contonded at length that the certified copy of the indictment and insisted that his position was backed up by endless authorities, some of which he quoted.

Indictment Itself Attackes. Identification of Beavers.

Indictment Itself Attacked. Lawyer Steuer then fired some unexpected hot shot in the eamp of the prosecution by contending that the indictment itself as drawn by United States District-Attorney Youngs, of Brooklyn, was faulty, and would not bold water and attacked the validity of the warrant issued under it.

To Consider Validity.

HEADS SMASHED IN FIGHT.

One Jerseyman Wields Beer Can and the Other a Wooden Tool

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 15.—In a fight in a hat shop at No. 114 Raliroad avenue, over a pint of beer, Adolph Lieber was struck on the head several times to-day by Benjamin Klinger, who used the beer pail as a weapon.

Lieber retaliated by fracturing Kinger's skull with a heavy wooden tool used by hatmakers. Both men are in a critical condition.

To Comsider Validity.

Commissioner Hitchcock said he had carefully considered the undictiment was receivable as such proof and he would admit it as such. Upon the question as to the validity of the indictiment he was not ready to decide.

The defense offered to submit a memorandum on the point raised, giving the devisions in support of their contention.

Gen. Burnett and Mr. Wise said they would likewise submit a memorandum and the Commissioner then adjourned the examination until the 18th, at which time he will give a decision on the point at issue.
